The 2017 season was the first year I had my sailboat (a Catalina 22) at Cove Marina. I paid about $500 for a slip that is in poor shape with no electricity. In September part of the dock came apart and started rubbing against the hull of my boat. I had to request permission to move to another slip to prevent further damage to the hull (or even a possible sinking).

The biggest surprise and disappointment with Cove Marina is the lack of water depth in the channel. My boat requires about 3' of water, which is not available at low tide. This severely restricts my use of the boat and is even a safety concern – potentially not being able to get back to my slip as a storm or darkness approaches.

I have heard rumors of dredging plans. This needs to happen ASAP in my opinion.

Thank you,
